Trauma and Grace
Theology in a Ruptured World
Serene Jones
$24.95 • 9780664234102

"Jones's reflections, along with poignant anecdotes, enliven her newest book."—Publishers Weekly

These essays explore recent works in the field of trauma studies. Of particular interest is the author's focus on long-term effects of collective violence on abuse survivors, war veterans, and marginalized populations, and how grace and redemption are exhibited in each context.

This year's program features a paper presentation by Donald A. Thorsen, professor of theology at Azusa Pacific University and co-editor of the Holiness Manifesto, who will discuss how the Wesleyan tradition shapes his social witness, focusing on insights from the Holiness Manifesto as well as the Wesleyan quadrilateral. Panel respondents include Ellen Ott Marshall (Emory University) and Michael G. Cartwright (University of Indianapolis). We invite all scholars who work within any of the various ecclesial traditions rooted in the evangelical renewal movement begun by John Wesley, or whose theological and ethical reflection is shaped by distinctly Wesleyan perspectives to attend.

"Catholic/Evangelical Dialogue"

Monterey

This year's gathering will focus on the ongoing Catholic/Evangelical dialogues that have taken place at Georgetown University and Eastern University. The dialogues have been exploring commonalities on issues such as justice for the poor, reproductive rights, and a consistent prolife viewpoint. Reporting from the Evangelical side will be Glen Stassen and David Gushee and from the Catholic side Cathleen Kaveny and John Langan, S.J.. There will also be two Baptist/Evangelical respondents and two Catholic respondents, plus time for open discussion to further these dialogues.

8:00-10:00pm Presbyterian Ethicists*Carmel*

Presbyterian Ethicists meet at SCE for an update on current developments in social witness in the PCUSA and our Reformed relatives. SCE members participating on study commissions and serving as consultant writers report on their projects. The impacts of church/seminary/college changes are discussed. Seminary and college ethicists comprise most of the group Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness (TEPSW) which helps connect the academy to the General Assembly, informing the life of congregations through policy studies and reports. The group sometimes meets in churches near the SCE annual meeting site. Liaison is provided by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, acswp@pcusa.org.

Panelists: Joan Henriksen Hellyer, Mayo Clinic

With the approval of the Board of Directors, the SCE has adopted a policy regarding IRB approval for research involving human subjects. This session will introduce the policy to members who have begun to engage or are considering research methodologies that include data gathering by means of ethnographic studies, fieldwork, interviews, deliberate observation, and the like. This type of research may fall under the purview of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Office for Human Research Protections and Federal Code Regulations 45 CFR Part 46 (Federal Policy for the Protection of Human Subjects, also known as the "Common Rule"). In order to ensure that the highest standards of research are employed in studies that include the participation of human subjects, the SCE requires that its members conducting this kind of research seek approval from a local Institutional Review Board (IRB) in compliance with the "Common Rule". The "Common Rule" requires that research involving human subjects undergo scrutiny by and receive approval from an IRB prior to the start of study to ensure that subjects are protected from harm.

"Children Speak: Second Graders' Experiences of Sin, Forgiveness, and Moral Agency in the Sacrament of Reconciliation"

Children's perspectives about their religious and moral experiences have received scant attention from Christian ethicists. Joining a growing number of scholars who stress the need to engage in child-centered research, I conducted a qualitative research study interviewing Catholic second graders about their experiences of the Sacrament of Reconciliation. The purpose of my paper is, first, to analyze their diverse interpretations of this sacrament. Second, I explore ethical issues about how children are treated within the Catholic Church that emerge from children's experiences. My interviews prompt me to examine what it means to treat children justly within Christian communities and within the discipline of Christian ethics.

"In Defense of The Vagina Monologues: Christian Responsibility to Women on Campus and in the Global Community"

In 2009, after years of protest, performances of Eve Ensler's controversial play, The Vagina Monologues, were in decline on Catholic campuses. Critics claim it promotes lesbianism, glorifies rape and incest, and objectifies women. In reality, V-Day seeks to prevent violence by magnifying the voices of formerly-silenced women around the globe. Christians who take seriously our call to care for "the least of these" must attend seriously to vaginas, particularly because Christianity has sometimes been a major instigator of violence against women. When handled skillfully, the play can foster critical dialogue and self-reflection, two essential parts of 21st-century Christian formation.

"Making Virtue Out of New Necessities: Internet Technologies and Christian Moral Life of the Future"

Even in its infancy, the internet has dramatically changed the way people communicate, learn, play, and do business. This paper will explore the moral implications of the internet and the particular forms of practice it shapes. Drawing upon contemporary media theory scholarship, the paper will begin by identifying some of the characteristics that distinguish the internet from previous communication technologies (i.e., opaque centralization, data agnosticism, immediacy, and push-mediation). The paper will then move beyond reiterating problems the internet shares with offline life (e.g., consumerism, pornography, loss of community and embodiment) to suggest particular opportunities and liabilities that internet technologies pose for the Christian life, closing with a proposal for the virtues required of "wired disciples" in the twenty-first century.

"The Beatitudes and Christian Ethics: A Virtue Perspective"

This paper begins by arguing that the beatitudes are fruitfully understood in the context of Classical ethical reflection on happiness and virtue. The bulk of the paper examines the relationship between the rewards and "qualifying conditions," and particularly whether the ultimate happiness depicted is a reversal of the qualifying conditions or an intensification of them. In arguing for an "intrinsic" relationship between rewards and conditions, the paper concludes by attending to how the beatitudes offer distinctively Christian answers to perennial ethical questions on the possibility of happiness in this life and the place of external goods in that happiness.

"Should Students Taking SATs Pee in a Cup? The Ethics of Cognitive Enhancing Drugs"

More and more students take prescription stimulants and narcolepsy medicines as study aids, using "cosmetic pharmacology" to enhance cognitive function. This "off label" use of prescription drugs by adolescents for neurocognitive enhancement raises several ethical concerns, including safety, efficacy, access (fairness) and coercion. Some believe the personal and social benefits of "smart drugs" justify allowing healthy adults to use them if these ethical concerns can be addressed. But the concentration of illicit use of prescription stimulants among 18-25 year olds suggests our winner-take-all educational system needs reform.

"Common Beauty and the Common Good: Theological Aesthetics and Justice in Urban America"

This paper examines community muralism in inner-city neighborhoods in order to illuminate the practical relationship between theological aesthetics and ethics in post-9/11 urban poverty. It suggests collaborative public art as a viable resource for the common good that counters its often conceptual, abstract and pragmatic tendencies with an organic, self-critical, and creative relationality. Ethical reflection on this public art lifts up four mystagogical components of the common good: "storied spaces," imaginative and emotive reasoning, creative moral agency, and aesthetic solidarity. These foster the often overlooked intuitive, experiential, tactile, and nonverbal potential of the "see-judge-act" praxis of Catholic social thought.

"'Who We Are' and Ethical Restraint in War: Christian Just War Ethics, International Law, and the Problem of National Political Character"

Can national political identity – an understanding of “who we are” as a people – restrain a government's conduct of war? If not – if, that is, modern democracies are incapable of being unified subjects of political action – then how shall belligerent conduct be effectively restrained? The paper will examine how Christian just war theorists – e.g. Ramsey, O'Donovan, Johnson – understand the character of political agency and its role in armed conflict. It will explore how Christian treatments of national political character can critically engage the ethical cosmopolitanism of international humanitarian law. The essay will argue for a revived notion of democratic civic nationalism.

"Re-traditionalizing Restorative Justice: Navajo Peacemaking, Domestic Violence, and Christian Ethics"

This paper retrieves restorative justice dimensions in indigenous practices, notably Navajo peacemaking circles. The first section examines Navajo peacemaker courts' emphasis on holistic healing and reintegration, stakeholder involvement, and individual and social transformation in their historical, cultural, and political (colonial/postcolonial) contexts. The penultimate section extends this discussion to a normative analysis of different theological, philosophical, sociological, and legal perspectives on restorative justice. The third section engages domestic abuse as a "hard case" for restorative justice. I concur with theologians and legal theorists who hold that such violence, though its harm is never fully obviated, can be reconciled through restored justice.

Margaret McLean, Santa Clara University, Markkula Center for Applied Ethics

Karen Peterson-Iyer, Santa Clara University, Markkula Center for Applied Ethics

Marc Tunzi, Natividad Medical Center, Salinas/Univ. of CA, San Francisco, School of Med

The cultural and ethnic diversity in the U.S. translates into incalculable cultural richness; yet it also provides occasion for a multitude of practical and ethical challenges in the achievement of "culturally competent" medical care. This panel will address these challenges, examining both the ethical justification for culturally competent healthcare and the implications for ethics of cross-cultural medical interactions. The panelists—all of whom have been part of an ongoing project at Santa Clara University addressing the ethics of culturally competent healthcare—will each offer a unique perspective on why and how cross-border encounters both complicate and enrich the ethical landscape.

Panelists: José Carrasco, P.I.C.O.

Shawnee Daniels-Sykes, SSND, Mount Mary College

Martha C. Taylor, Elmhurst Presbyterian Church

Marta Vides Saade, Ramapo College of New Jersey

This joint session focuses on the future of liberation ethics in light of global economics and, in particular, the manner in which U.S. policy either reinforces globally destructive economic practices or provides relief for communities around the world most affected by neo-liberal market forces. Panelists in this session will articulate how liberation ethics in the 21st century can address global economic practices, attitudes, and habits in light of poverty, multi-national corporations, HIV/AIDS, international trading, and the like. This session will also invite scholars to dialogue about issues related to global economics and how liberationist scholars and faith communities can critique U.S. public policy in efforts to lobby for more humane policy measures.

William Hart, University of North Carolina at Greenboro

Martin Kavka, Florida State University

This panel considers Charles Taylor's A Secular Age (Harvard UP, 2007) in relation to Western traditions that are not within its main purview but are nonetheless affected by secularism. In what ways is Taylor's account applicable to or illuminative of African American thought and history, on one hand, and Judaism and Islam, on the other? Does taking account of these other traditions complicate or otherwise challenge his narrative? What are the broader implications for our understanding of the forms and dynamics of Western ethics?

David Gushee, Mercer University (SCE)

National and international debate rages about the moral legitimacy of torture. Recent practices in American national security, including extraordinary rendition and "enhanced interrogation techniques" at U.S. military installations, reflect the urgency to examine the moral morass surrounding torture. Public discourse about the ethics of torture and torture ethics has thus far failed to provide sustained, reasoned and religiously-grounded arguments. This innovative panel is intended not just to offer religious reflections on torture, but also to pioneer conversations between the three cooperating societies now meeting together.

"The Thomistic Internet? Theological Questioning in a Web 2.0 Age"

The internet: some have claimed it as "Gnostic" and evil; others say it provides good possibilities for theological work. By surveying various Web 2.0 media, I suggest that from the point of view of users, Web 2.0 has elements of the kind of dialogue Alasdair MacIntyre suggests of Thomas Aquinas' Summa Theologica. However, though Web 2.0 spaces invite theological conversations, I claim they ultimately become restricted, even a-theological. Theologians need to take note of how Web 2.0 truncates their own work, even if they never use the internet themselves.

"Under the Palaver Tree: Community Ethics for Truth-Telling and Reconciliation"

The African notion of the palaver, as described by Congolese theologian Benezet Bujo, is an excellent resource for post-conflict reconciliation. The palaver creates a physical, psycho-social space for open communication where persons are integrated into the life and expectations of their communities. Palaver communication can heal psyches and relationships, educate community members about moral norms, and enforce the community's ethical standards. Three palaver-based commitments intersect with goals of post-conflict reconciliation: a commitment to open communication, especially truth-telling; a commitment to memory, or developing a shared sense of the past; and a commitment to reconciliation at the communal level.

"Water Privatization: Objectionable in Practice, Not Principle?"

This paper explores water privatization in developing nations: the fundamental tension between the demands of the poor for cheap, abundant water as a human right, and the claims of environmental movements that providing cheap abundant water encourages waste and ultimately squanders the single most necessary resource for all living things. What does it mean to say that all persons—or more, all living creatures—have a right to water? What is the foundation of such a claim? Under what circumstances, if any, could the privatization of a municipal or regional water system satisfy demands for social and environmental justice?

"You seemed like nice people, so I like to accommodate: Altruism and Trust in Genetic Research"

Scientists who conduct genetic research rely on the goodwill and voluntary contribution of thousands of donors who risk re-identification, compromises to their privacy, and possible discrimination and stigmatization. This paper will present original empirical research as a grounding for the moral analysis of the concepts of donor altruism and trust. Data from interviews with donors to biobanks from both privileged and marginalized groups support the concept that persons whose communities have a long history of injury at the hands of research will find the altruistic motive less compelling as a reason to participate in genetic research.

"Is Social Solidarity an Ethical Principle Indigenous to Latin American Identity?"

José Carlos Mariátegui's claim that social solidarity is an idea indigenous to Latin America is, like the region's literature, a magical realism where idealized conceptions of an indigenous utopian past easily coexist with historical and social realities. Mariátegui was a major influence on Gustavo Gutiérrez. Gutiérrez corrects Mariátegui by showing how social solidarity is an ideal consistently valued by Latin Americans throughout their history for critiquing social injustice and developing solutions, but grounds his argument not in an idealized view of history, but in the faith and culture of Latin Americans understood through theology and the social sciences.

"Unmasking Evil that Parades as Good: Critical Moral Vision"

Widely shared patterns of living in the U.S. entail economic norms and practices that have devastating impact on many people impoverished by them and on Earth's ecosystems. That economic injustice and ecological devastation go largely unrecognized in the dominant public discourse. This "moral blindness" is the ethical issue addressed in this paper. The paper proposes a conceptual framework and theoretical tools grounded in critical social theory for responding to the following question: In contemporary U.S. society, what dynamics explain the failure of relatively economically privileged people to recognize that prevailing economic norms and practices have devastating consequences for Earth's ecosystems and for many people?

In this paper, I correlate the ethics of vision and responsibility materials with the black Christian tradition, a tradition epitomized by the life and work of Martin Luther King Jr. The ethics of vision and responsibility materials help us think about important things that are going on in King's theology and agenda and in black theology and ethics in general by providing a lens to help focus on certain themes and dimensions of black thinking. This can sensitize us to patterns of power plays and suffering that Niebuhr, Murdoch, and Hauerwas tend to over look.

This paper proposes an account of natural law grounded in an overlooked biblical text and in Reformed covenant theology, in conversation with contemporary biblical exegesis, Jewish conceptions of the Noahide commands, and recent Protestant and Roman Catholic literature on natural law. It argues that the Noahic covenant established with all creation (Genesis 8:20-9:17) provides necessary theological foundation for understanding nature and common human moral obligations. This account of natural law provides a sound way to integrate natural law theory with the biblical narrative and to conceive of natural law as a God-given standard mediated through a fallen world.

Jewish ethics in a new key is a call not only for a change in behavior, but a change in consciousness. "Theravada Buddhist Abhidhamma and Moral Formation: Lists and Attachments in the Practice of Religious Ethics"

This paper examines the relevance of Buddhist Abhidhamma texts, those dealing with the analysis and systematization of mental states arising in and examined by meditation practice, as a resource for religious ethics. Developing recent commentaries on the prevalence and significance of interlocking lists in Buddhist canonical texts, this paper argues that the model of moral formation present therein suggests how positive moral motivation (the ability of practitioners to cultivate wholesome states and right intentions) is dependent upon practitioners' abilities to separate complex mental phenomena into their component parts, thereby rendering them both increasingly non-substantial and thereby less subject to attachment.

"Imago Dei as Imago Trinitatis: How We, as Community, Image God through Human Rights and Solidarity"

Can we, as community, can said to be imago dei? For Christian ethics, understanding the imago dei must also be imago trinitatis. Drawing on Scripture regarding the imago dei and covenant, as well as the contemporary Trinitarian theologies of Catherine LaCugna and Elizabeth Johnson, this paper argues that equality, mutuality and reciprocity are central to being imago dei. In addition to each person as imago dei; we, as community, image God. Theologically, this links human rights and solidarity in the imago dei. As such, we cannot faithfully image God, as community, without respect for human rights and in solidarity.

"Ethics Behind the Screen: the Debate over Professional Ethics in Computer Programming"

The study of work in Christian ethics has long been divided into professional and business ethics. Many emerging areas of work, however, blur these categories, while practices of ethical formation and enforcement within traditional professions are being strained by market and technological forces. The debates within computing over a "professional code of ethics" offer one lens for re-considering the business / professional ethics division. There is a dearth of moral critique of the U.S. and Israeli partnership. Allegedly bound by a love of democracy, unflattering similarities are ignored: both were founded on ethnic cleansing; both use past violence against them to justify violence against others; both disguise their preference for state-sponsored violence (war) over diplomacy and conciliation; both would disarm other nations of weapons they themselves possess; both cover up atrocities such as No Gun Ri in Korea and the attack on the USS Liberty and the killing of Rachel Corrie. Nonviolent prophetic remembrance is the antidote to the violence of forbidden memories.

Despite a planet in jeopardy at human hands, the moral universe in Christian ethics is typically human society only, to the neglect of the full community of life and its abiotic envelope. Thus Christian ethics has addressed homicide, suicide, and genocide but not biocide or genocide. What difference would it make to re-frame Christian ethics by centering the primal elements of life (earth, air, fire, water)? How is each element a primal element structurally, ecologically, and spiritually? And how would standard basepoints in Christian ethics—theories of justice, or theological anthropology—be affected by centering these elements?

Human trafficking is a growing problem in Latin America and the Caribbean. Women between the ages of 18 and 30 are trafficked for prostitution and pornography, often with the consent of their husbands or other family members. While political and economic factors contribute to human trafficking, a lingering culture of machismo in Latin America fosters systemic discrimination and victimization against women and girls. A theological ethics grounded in the doctrine of imago Dei can promote greater justice for women and children by pressuring national governments to enforce stringent penalties, better police borders, and eliminate the socio-economic conditions that enable trafficking.

"What is Islamic Religious Pluralism?: Identifying Soteriological Boundaries and Exploring Ethical Implications"

Recent decades have witnessed intensifying discussions among Muslim thinkers regarding the fate of Others. This has given way to a unique debate, particularly evident in the context of Western scholarship, which pits inclusivists against pluralists. In the present study I identify some of the most influential modes of soteriological pluralism in contemporary Muslim discourse. I shall begin by examining the soteriological views of two seminal scholars whose writings are often employed in contemporary pluralist works, Muḥyī al-Dīn Ibn al-'Arabī (d. 638/1240) and Muḥammad Rashīd Ridā (d. 1935). In doing so, I shall highlight critical soteriological differences between these scholars and their pluralist supporters today.

"Islamic Legal Theory and the Legitimacy of Secular Positive Law: Is Modern Religious Freedom Sufficient for the Shari'a 'Purpose' [Maqsid] of 'Preserving Religion'[Hifz al-din]?"

Perhaps the most popular trend in contemporary Islamic legal and political thought is to view shari'a as embodied not primarily in specific rules nor in terms of a painstaking, thorough extraction of those rules from the revelatory texts according to the methods of classical legal theory (usul al-fiqh), but rather as defined in terms of the overall "purposes" (maqasid) for which God revealed the law. The purpose of this paper is to examine some treatments of the meaning and extension of the Islamic legal purpose of protecting religion (hifz al-din), with an eye towards Islamic legal theorists' explicit or implicit encounter with modern liberal and secularist understandings of what it means to "protect religion."

Perhaps due to the growth of interaction between diverse individuals and the conflicts this makes possible, humility is increasingly a virtue of interest to Western secular ethicists; but the virtue has roots in religious traditions, including Islam, that are often ignored by philosophical ethicists. In this paper, three goals are pursued: I offer an interpretation of the virtue of humility (tawadu') in the thought of Abu Hamid al-Ghazali, I defend that accounts' plausibility for contemporary Islamic and philosophical ethics, and I consider how the virtue might be put to work in contemporary interreligious dialogue.

Legal concerns for neutrality, analytical argumentation, and precedence seemingly attenuate the efficacy of prophetic voices within the law. Panelists Cathleen Kaveny, Bill O'Neill, and John Coleman will reflect on the functions of the prophetic discourse vis-à-vis moral outrage and political and legal order. Can, should, and in what capacities does the law create the conditions for the possibility of moral outrage? Does appeal to "evolving standards of decency" (e.g., *Roper v. "Fieldwork: The State of the Art"

In order for theological ethicists to undertake fieldwork with disciplinary integrity, we need to engage the anthropological literature on the subject. This is the aim of our session. The foundational text for the session is Ethnographic Fieldwork: An Anthropological Reader, edited by Antonius Robben and Jeffrey Sluka. This session will focus on where the ethics of stem cell research and treatments are headed. Opening comments will be offered by former SCE President and Graduate Theological Union—Berkeley bioethics professor Karen Lebacqz, plus U.S. President's Council on Bioethics member and Stanford University professor William Hurlbut. Ethical issues to be addressed include: alternatives to the use of embryonic stem cells, use of animals in pre-clinical research, and the special challenges of stem cell use in human subjects, such as unknown risks, the need for life-long monitoring, and informed consent dilemmas. Animated discussion will undoubtedly follow the opening comments. There will also be time for personal updates from group members.

The national assessment movement in higher education has heated up over the last decade. Stakeholders are increasingly seeking social scientific validation of learning outcomes and teaching methods. Leaders in higher education are pushing for more open access to higher education, greater affordability, and higher graduation rates. Analysis of most immigrant and minority student populations shows how (1) all these goals vie against each other and (2) the concept of effective love can make sense of these goals and provide a way forward for higher education. The concept of effective love rests on writings by Kierkegaard, Nussbaum, and developmental psychologists.

 "Euthanasia in a Welfare State: Experiences from the Review Procedure in The Netherlands"

In the Dutch euthanasia practice, the number of euthanasia cases has gone down but is on the rise again. Euthanasia is increasingly seen in terms of autonomous decisions of people facing a future loss of dignity (i.e., Alzheimer in an early stage) or experiencing an irreversible loss of meaning in their lives. Occasionally, loneliness and insufficient health care conditions form the background for a euthanasia request. In this paper, we will see how these developments are substantiated by and reflected in day-to-day euthanasia practice, by analyzing the ideological, social, and psychological aspects of 1200 euthanasia cases as reported by physicians in the years 2005-2009.

 "Should Race Matter? A Constructive Theological-Ethical Assessment of the Post-Racial Ideal"

A familiar refrain now in American public discourse is that we have entered the much hoped for era of postracialism. This paper, however, challenges the viability of the postracial ideal. Despite its socially constructed quality, is race necessarily an illegitimate feature of human identity, individually and communally? Should racial identities always be treated as suspect? This paper explores how contemporary theological and philosophical reflections on political community may or may not serve as resources in addressing these questions. I will propose the value of racial affiliations as signifiers of diverse goods and narratives central to social and political flourishing.

"Ethical Issues in Faith-Based NGOs: A Cross-Cultural Perspective"

Because of recent ethical lapses, public corporations often take proactive steps to prevent ethical failures. However, not-for-profit, non-governmental, and especially faith-based organizations typically assume that they already practical ethical behavior. Yet, in order to survive, all require the trust of donors who often have a differing cultural perspective of appropriate ethical behavior. Ethical challenges to such organizations include affinity fraud, charismatic leadership, the use of volunteers, and cross-cultural issues such as hierarchy and transparency. Major recommendations include building strong boards and equipping them with the business and cross-cultural skills to cope with the ethical issues they face.

"Encountering ET: Cosmic Contact, Cosmic Charter"

As humanity ventures into outer space, the likelihood increases for terrestrial-extraterrestrial contact with other intelligent life. Contact will have social and ecological impacts. It will affect the human psyche and humans' perspectives on the human place on Earth and in the cosmos, much as did the Copernican and Darwinian revolutions. Prior to and during such engagement, humankind should reflect on potential human responsibilities toward extraterrestrial living beings, and devise ecologically responsible means to develop and use natural goods discovered on celestial bodies. A contextually evolving Cosmic Charter will be proposed to guide human consciousness and conduct in the cosmic commons.

"Undocumented Immigration as Dehumanization: A Christian Anthropological Critique"

The failures of the present immigration system in the United States have issued dire consequences for persons on the move. The centrality of human dignity and agency in Christian ethics challenges discourse and practices driven by xenophobic fears, a market logic, and indifference to vulnerable populations. Drawing upon Margaret Farley's "obligating features of personhood," Catholic social encyclicals' principles of economic ethics, and Reinhold Niebuhr's collective egotism, this paper will elaborate the ways in which a Christian anthropology illuminates and critiques patterns of dehumanization vis à vis contemporary undocumented immigration to the U.S.

"Narcissistic Desire, Heterology, and Privatio Boni in Augustine's Confessions"

This paper examines how Augustine coordinates two accounts of evil in Confessions: evil as excessive attachment to temporal goods and evil as a deficiency of good. Grieving the passing of a childhood friend, Augustine confesses that his friendship was the fruit of a hollow, narcissistic cupiditas that confused changing for unchanging goods. From these facts we can see how evil as excess and as deficiency mutually inform each other. That insight can be sharpened by turning to Augustine's response to Monica's passing. Taken together, Augustine's responses illumine the meaning of evil, caritas, and an Augustinian ethics of other-regarding desire.

"Peace, Justice, and Reconciliation: Lessons from El Salvador"

This study examines various Christian responses to the goals, findings, and recommendations of several Latin American truth commissions, particularly concerning justice and reconciliation. This presentation argues that it is unhelpful to promote reconciliation without first attending to the truth of what happened between parties that are supposed to reconcile. Struggling societies can move to more significant forms of reconciliation by undertaking a serious commitment to truth and justice as well as to peace.

"'Ain't I a Person?' Reimagining Human Rights in Light of Childhood"

Though children constitute a third of humanity, the ethical groundings of "human rights" are traditionally and purposefully adult-centered. Because of national and international movements in the twentieth century, few would dispute that children do in practice have rights. But children's rights will never adequately help children – or human rights humanize humanity – until rights ethics itself is transformed in light of children's experiences. Just as feminism, womanism, and other movements have reimagined ethical norms, so also must a new "childism," now beyond autonomy, entitlement, need, or even agency to an expanding interdependent responsiveness to the gift of each irreducible human other.

"Reconceiving Public Life"

Cedar

Panelists: Eric Gregory, Princeton University

Amy Laura Hall, Duke University

Charles Mathewes, University of Virginia

Ted Smith, Vanderbilt University

Respondent: Victor Anderson, Vanderbilt University

Questions around religion and public life have done much to structure the field of Christian ethics in recent decades. The last three years have seen a series of books trying to revise received understandings of these debates. Authors have questioned the nature and boundaries of the public, engaged different companion disciplines (e.g., ethnography, cultural history), suggested new genres, and more. This panel invites four authors to extend their own work, consider the projects of others, and propose some next directions for research in "religion and public life." The respondent will ask if there is anything new – and worth keeping - in the proposals. Open conversation will follow.

Daniel Scheid, Duquesne University

Robert Stivers, Pacific Lutheran University

Jim Nash was an active member of the Environmental Ethics and Theology Interest Group from its start. His book, Loving Nature, is one of the most important works in the field. When he died in 2008 he was working on a book on frugality, which he called the subversive virtue. As an author, editor, teacher, Executive Director of the Massachusetts Council of Churches and, later, the Churches Center for Theology and Public Policy, his contribution is enormous. At the 2010 meeting we will honor the life work of Jim with a panel.

Speaker: Jamie Gates, Center for Justice and Reconciliation, Point Loma Nazarene University, CA

Respondents: Miguel F. De La Torre, Iliff School of Theology

Kelly S. Johnson, University of Dayton

Dr. Gates presents on two ongoing practices of liturgy and ethics in action at Friendship Park at the Tijuana border: the annual interfaith celebration of La Posadas Sin Fronteras, a para-liturgical event that plays of the ancient Mexican ritual of La Posada, and the practice of cross-border Eucharistic communion. In response to efforts by Homeland Security in 2008 to shut down the park and the border, the latter has become a form of nonviolent protests and has led to arrests. Theological analyses of and responses to these practices will be provided by Drs. De La Torre and Johnson.

"Shaming and Being Shame Faced: The Role of Shame in Jewish Moral, Legal, and Pedagogical Thought"

SCE Respondent: Darlene Fozard Weaver, Villanova University

This paper traces Jewish thinking that on the one hand condemns shaming others while also encouraging a sense of personal shame (boshet) for the religious and moral lives of children and adults. It examines 1. Halakhic writings which categorize "boshet," as a fine for embarrassing someone, 2. Early rabbinic aggadic comments that both condemn actions leading to "bushah," shaming of others, but also advocate "boshet panim," shamefacedness as a positive virtue, 3. medieval sifrei musar and 4. contemporary Jewish writings. The overall goal is to argue that having a sense of personal shame is a healthy moral character trait.

"Constructing Muslim Subjects with Liberal Illogics: Tehran as 'The Unlikely Sex Change Capital of the World'"

In this paper I seek to analyze what our surprise and discomfort at the status of sexual reassignment surgery (SRS) in Tehran can tell us about pervasive assumptions related to 1) Muslims as moral subjects, and 2) the meanings of sexual freedom. I focus on journalistic rhetoric to highlight how Iranians, as Muslim subjects, are constructed as always sexually repressed based on certain liberal norms that have become "commonsensical." Specifically, I argue the media construction of Tehran as the "unlikely sex change capital of the world" depends on the success of human rights discourse (specifically the LGBT rights model) at establishing a form of homonormativity.

"The Ethics of Marital Discipline in Pre-modern Qur'anic Exegesis"

In 2007, a German judge denied an expedited divorce to a German-Moroccan woman who was physically abused by her husband on the basis of the judge's interpretation of Qur'an 4:34. This case underscored the centrality of male authority and domestic violence as the present nexus of the discussions in gender and Islam. This paper takes male authority in marriage and domestic violence in Qur'anic exegesis as the focus of its study. The various approaches adopted within the pre-modern disciplines of Qur'anic exegesis are examined in order to consider whether the scholars in this field of study used the tools at their disposal to expand or restrict male/female power in marriage.

"Neo-Mu'tazilism and the Reform Project"

In 833, the theological controversy between traditional ulema (usually referred to as Sunni Hanbalis) and rationalist theologians (usually referred to as Mu'tazilis) over the createdness of the Qur'an was institutionalized by the Abbasid state into an organized procedure known as the Mihna. My paper demonstrates how dogmatic theology impacted the development of Islamic legal institutions and doctrines, and how this development impacted Muslims' normative system of belief and their understanding of the ethical foundation of Islamic law.

"Whether Modern Warriors, Too, Will Have Souls: Moral Interiority and the Just War Tradition"

With military ethics programs unable to prevent misconduct during war, some have turned to more ethically reliable robots. Interestingly, both approaches appeal explicitly to just war principles. This paper argues that just war's public triumphs - as a secular professional ethic, theory of statecraft, and guide to technology - come at the expense of inner formation. Redressing this deficiency requires renewed focus on the rich yet conflicted realm of human motives, dispositions, and emotions, as discussed by Augustine, Luther, and Reinhold Niebuhr. But can these Augustinian resources help us reclaim just war's inner ethic and hone the conscience of today's warrior?

"Open Borders? The European Experience and the North American Context"

Conventional wisdom holds that borders are increasingly outmoded in a globalized world. However, borders in North America and Europe are being reasserted through ambitious and innovative efforts to regulate the transnational movements of peoples. This paper examines the practice, politics and consequences of the Schengen Agreement within and outside the European Union and their possible implications for the North American context. As this paper contends, in a post 9/11 world, the free movement of people can be consistent with the reinforcement of national borders.

"Which Way to Justice? Reconciliation and Reparations in (White) U.S. Protestantism"

Recent emergence of a "reparations paradigm" in some denominations challenges the "reconciliation paradigm" that has dominated U.S. Protestantism since the 1960s. By exploring white Protestant participation in the Civil Rights Movement and the rupture of white/Black relationships that came with the growth of Black Power, this paper will, first, argue that reconciliation has proven inadequate for contending with racism and that reparations are more likely to produce the results some Protestants seek. Second, this paper will analyze current reparations movements in the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches (USA). The theo-ethical framework being utilized will be highlighted, with particular attention given to the problem of whiteness and white moral agency.

"Corporations, CROs and Profit: Ethics in the New Bio-Political Economy of Globalized Biomedical Research"

A main catalyst in the emergence of the bioethics was the abuse of human subjects. Theologians were key in shaping the normative principles for human subjects research (HSR). Yet, while HSR in 2009 differs dramatically from its shape in the 1960s and 1970s, changes which have occurred over the past two decades have received little theological analysis. This paper will consider the globalization of HSR to map the myriad challenges that the global, economic, industrial infrastructure of HSR presents to the standard principles of research ethics. Particular attention will be paid to the nature of the new agent of HSR-the corporation or contract research organization.

"Superabundance of the Gift and Ethic of Recognition: Contrast or Complementarity in Christian Ethics?"

The recent philosophical and theological debate on the gift tends either to underline the impossibility of the pure gift or to install it as a counter-paradigm to social thinking in terms of choice and exchange. In order to understand the foundations of social cohesion and of social dynamics, the paper proposes to interpret the theme of the gift as complementing the paradigm of recognition. Reflecting on Ricoeur's critique of the centrality of the "struggle" for the understanding of recognition it argues for a new interpretation of the "economy of the gift" in Christian social ethics.

"Refugee Rights and State Sovereignty: Theological Perspectives on the Status of Borders"

There is a relative dearth of theological contribution to present-day discussion about the status of borders. Secularist discourse tends to divide between 'partialists' and 'impartialists'. Partialists work with an ideal of states as distinct cultural communities which justifies priority for the interests of citizens over refugees.

Impartialists work with an ideal of states as cosmopolitan agents which take into account equally the interests of citizens and refugees. The aim of the paper is to show how selected biblical texts help to rethink these categories, and offer different ways of construing the meaning of borders.

"God, Caesar, Law and Business: Toward Fresh Approaches to the Roles of Government and Law in Business Practices in Modern Russia"

In the past fifteen years a few of books on business ethics have been published in Russia. These books have obvious structural similarities, which suggest that Western and Russian business people operate with similar values. Yet some of the things that transpired in Russia during the last few years suggest that Russian business people may operate out of somewhat different values. "Environmental Care, Deification, and Gregory of Nazianzus: A Christian Voice from the East on Ecology and Responsibility"

The dominant "stewardship" model of exercising moral responsibility over the environment provides a limited Christian approach in which God's role is mediated by moral prescriptions and care for the environment is a by-product of the soteriological process. Gregory of Nazianzus (330-389), however, offers a different model that re-centers God's role in the care of the environment and integrates environmental care into the soteriological process. This undertaking is initiated in Christ who, in being baptized, "brings the cosmos up with him" (Or. 39.16), and this process is fulfilled in our own appropriation of the work of Christ in our daily living.

Evangelical Ethics

Monterey

The Interest Group topic this year is "sanctity of life," with the discussion initiated by David Gushee using arguments from his The Sanctity of Life. A theological-biblical-philosophical overview is followed by consideration of how certain segments of evangelicalism use the term and the extent to which an expanded understanding of the concept could serve the ethical discourse of the church and political engagement with the broader society. Two group participants (one non-U.S.) serve as both respondents and observers of the use of the term in American discourse. "Risking Death for the Love of God: The Theological Ethics of Pentecostals Engaged in High Risk Social Action"

Based on qualitative research using grounded theory methodology, I explore the theological ethics of Pentecostals engaged in high risk peace and justice work in areas where their lives or health are endangered. This theological-psychological study yields insight into ways that theology and experience influence and sustain the risk-taking and nonviolent ethics of Pentecostals engaged in social action. Christomorphic (transformed/shaped like Jesus) pneumatology (the work of the Holy Spirit) provides a theo-ethical framework for our study of peacemakers and justice-seekers who risk their health and lives for others because they see themselves as shaped by Jesus and empowered by the Spirit.

"From Consumers to Subjects: The Implications of 'Sexting' for Christian Sexual Ethics in the Digital Era"

Sexting - sending nude or semi-nude photos of oneself with a cell phone - is a growing trend among adolescents. This trend in pornography, however, cannot be adequately evaluated by current research. Pornography research often focuses on the effects of consuming pornography, but sexting allows adolescents to make themselves (intentionally or unintentionally) pornographic subjects in online social communities. This paper focuses on how such a shift in the ways adolescents interact with pornography poses a challenge to Christian sexual ethics in a digital age, and asks whether embodiment theories (e.g. James Nelson) can satisfactorily address cyber-sexual phenomena like sexting.

"The Future of the Animal in Christian Ethics: Beyond a Politically Motivated Silence"

For the most part, Christian ethics has accepted the exclusive Enlightenment identification of moral value with human persons. This paper argues on theological grounds that such a view is not sustainable and that Christians must now recognize the fundamental solidarity of human beings with other animals. The reason ethicists have been slow to recognize this is at root political - no surprise given the political motivations for oppression on grounds of race or gender. It is now time to recognize economic gain from exploitation of other animals should not silence rigorous theological and ethical attention to the question of the animal.

*San Juan"Towards a Theological Understanding of Health and Disease"

Concepts of health and disease are foundational to biomedical ethics, present under the surface of arguments about many bioethical issues, but remain highly contested. This paper engages critically with a range of philosophical and bioethical models of health, and with theological analyses of such models, and outlines a theological understanding of health and disease. It is argued that a theologically satisfactory account of health and disease must be teleological in character, and that the teleology that is needed must be learned from what has been disclosed of God's good purposes for human creatures in and through Christ.

*Silicon Valley"Ethics of Abortion: Considerations of Community, Choice, and Responsibility"

Despite recent attempts to find "common ground," policy debate continues to see pro-life and pro-choice religiously-identified groups base their ethical analysis of abortion on absolutist moral principles. Both can perpetuate a non-relational anthropology and divorce acts of moral agency from responsibilities to one's self, family, or community. This paper will discuss the benefits and detriments of seeking common ground on abortion related policies that disproportionately affect young women of ethnic/racial minorities. Moving from common ground to common good arguments, I develop an ethic of responsibility that addresses personal and community duties grounded in norms of justice, bodily integrity, and mutuality.

*Sierra"Eight Is Enough: Ethical Implications of the California Octuplet Case"

The recent California octuplets case raises a number of important issues that need to be addressed in the context of the increasingly widespread practice of in-vitro fertilization. This paper explores some of those issues as looked at from the perspective of protestant theological ethics and public theology, examining the moral responsibilities of the various participants in the process, both before and after the octuplets' birth, including the mother, her doctors, the health care bureaucracy, the wider society, and the media. Each of these participants failed in significant respects to consider the ethical implications of the births in this complicated case.

*Pine"The Natural Law and Innovative Forms of Marriage: A Reconsideration"

This paper explores the implications of a natural law account of marriage for the gay marriage controversy, starting from the concept of the natural law developed by scholastic jurists and theologians in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. Admittedly, this may seem like an unpromising starting point for a sexual ethic for the twenty-first century. Yet the scholastics' views on sexuality had more in common with our own than we might suppose – not only with respect to their substantive positions, but also with respect to their uncertainties, ambiguities, and questions. It is these latter, especially, which open up fruitful points of contact between their views of marriage, and our own.

*Monterey"Moral Cooperation with Evil and Social Ethics"

This paper explores the possibilities for retrieving the concept of moral cooperation with evil for Christian social ethics. It begins with an exploration of the history of the concept and then argues that while discussions of social sin in political and environmental ethics correctly identify the problem of complicity, they fail to provide a way to distinguish among competing goods or evils. The author returns to the moral manuals for an understanding of cooperation that acknowledges the difficulties of finite human beings making choices in a complex world, but recognizes a duty to identify evil and avoid furthering it.

"Complex Integrity: An Approach to Moral Agency for Asian Americans"

This presentation constructs an approach to moral agency from the perspective of Asian Americans, who often experience both blended and dissonant cultures and norms, simultaneous racial privilege and discrimination, and simultaneous marginalization and exemplarization. "Complex integrity" as a character trait could assist Asian Americans navigate the conflicting cultural and moral responsibilities they face. Whilst one with "simple integrity" maintains a dogmatic consistency of belief, voice and action, one with complex integrity acknowledges multiple sources of moral knowledge, multiple moral responsibilities, and constructs integrity through weaving a moral narrative that guides and motivates one in moral action toward a desired future

"Empowering Christian Congregations for the Practice of Restorative Justice in the Community – Experience-Based Strategies for Transformation"

Speaker: Rev. Jean Greenwood, United Theological Seminary of the Twin Cities; Dispute Resolution Institute, Hamline University School of Law

Rev. Jean Greenwood, ordained Presbyterian Clergywoman, well-known early proponent, practitioner and teacher of Restorative Justice practices, will explore with us how Christian congregations might take up the vocation of fostering transformative reparative action and reconciliation in the wider community to serve the common good on issues of crime, wrong-doing and the legacy of social sins in America's past. She writes, "Restorative justice grows out of the heart of religious experience, and allows people of faith to move from preaching reconciliation to participating.... Restorative Justice is a gift that transforms us as it invites others to experience the reality of restoration."

"Liberation Ethics, Global Economics and U.S. Public Policy"

Panelists: Michael Castro, Iliff School of Theology

Keri Day, Brite Divinity School

Michael-Ray Matthews, Activist, P.I.C.O.

Respondent: Ana Bedard, Loyola University Chicago

This joint session focuses on the future of liberation ethics in light of global economics and, in particular, the manner in which U.S. policy either reinforces globally destructive economic practices or provides relief for communities around the world most affected by neo-liberal market forces. Panelists in this session will articulate how liberation ethics in the 21st century can address global economic practices, attitudes, and habits in light of poverty, multi-national corporations, HIV/AIDS, international trading, and the like. This session will also invite scholars to dialogue about issues related to global economics and how liberationist scholars and faith communities can critique U.S. public policy in efforts to lobby for more humane policy measures.

"The Making of Jewish Gender: Normative Gender Roles versus Diverse Sexual Identities"

SCE Respondent: Kathryn Blanchard, Alma College

Jewish legal traditions have predominantly been committed to shaping what can be identified as a dual gender-grid. The social vision that halakhah or Jewish normative thinking projects aims to assign different and mostly complementary social roles to men and women, challenged since the seventies by Jewish feminism in the U.S. in particular.

What is, however, further remarkable is the attention that Jewish legal discourse from early on devotes to the recognition of sexually diverse people, whether dually or non-sexed, or differently sexed, who do not easily fit its idealized gender grid. Hence, traditional Jewish legal discourse offers both a challenge and an opportunity for the shaping of a Jewish ethical perspective on these gender issues.

PROCREATIVE ETHICS: Philosophical and Christian Approaches to Questions at the Beginning of Life
by Fritz Oehlschlaeger

978-1-80608-230-0 / $42 / 380 pp.

"Fritz Oehlschlaeger has written a remarkable book that needs to be read by everyone with a stake in moral questions at life's beginning. Displaying theological and philosophical sophistication as well as a profound wisdom, these arguments must be taken seriously by those who agree with Oehlschlaeger as well as those who do not."

—Joel James Shuman, King's College

"Writing with a modesty that betrays the depth of argument that characterizes Procreative Ethics, Fritz Oehlschlaeger has written the most important book in bioethics in recent memory. Bioethics has long suffered from a stale imagination. Oehlschlaeger, an acknowledged outsider to the field, brings to his work a fresh imagination shaped by literary texts and a profound humanity. Hopefully many will want to emulate his work in other areas of bioethics."

—Stanley Hauerwas, Duke University

THE NEW YODER

edited by Peter Dula and Chris K. Huebner

978-1-80899-044-3 / $39 / 358 pp.

The work of John Howard Yoder is gaining influence in some surprising places. A new generation of scholars has begun reading Yoder alongside figures most often associated with post-structuralism, neo-Nietzscheanism, and post-colonialism, resulting in original and productive new readings of his work. At the same time, scholars from outside of theology and ethics departments, indeed outside of Christianity itself, like Romand Coles and Daniel Boyarin, have discovered in Yoder a significant conversation partner for their own work. This volume collects some of the best of those essays in hope of encouraging more such work from readers of Yoder and in hopes of attracting others to his important work.

CONTRIBUTORS: Daniel Barber, Peter Blum, Daniel Boyarin, Romand Coles, Cynthia Hess, Chris Huebner, Travis Kroeker, Nancey Murphy, Alain Epp Weaver, J. Alexander Sider, Jonathan Tran, Joseph Wiebe, and Nathan Kerr
